

Jeffrey Still

Director of Special Programs

Jeffrey Still is a retired Naval Officer who served his country as a Navy SEAL, in some of the most challenging, storied, military roles of our time. He has spent over two decades leading fast-paced organizations, driving innovation, directing change, and advising high-level leaders on strategy and operations. After successful tours with SEAL Team Eight and leading the SEAL Sniper school, he was selected into Naval Special Warfare Development Group where he remained until retiring after 22 years of service.

A highly-trained and decorated Navy SEAL, Jeff was one of the silent professionals our nation called upon to complete the hardest tasks in the most austere environments, deploying on hundreds of combat missions across multiple theaters of combat. He developed and led multiple programs, some considered among the most advanced Special Forces programs in the military today. Among some of the first SEALs to use a dog in modern combat, Jeff is credited with leading and growing one of our nations most advanced working dog programs.

Following his military career, Jeff formed a successful business consulting group and was recruited to lead several commercial business turnarounds. His concepts and vision have been published on multiple occasions in Inside Business Magazine in addition to contributions towards other business journal articles.

Jeff continues to tailor and apply his leadership expertise to a variety organizations, decoding his SEAL team training and experiences into powerful, actionable insights on leadership, innovation, strategy, decision-making, and implementing operations in challenging and uncertain environments.

In his discussions “Getting to X”, Jeff shares what he learned from basic SEAL training through his 18 years as a SEAL, and beyond. “Getting to X” looks at the qualities and characteristics that set apart highly reliable individuals and organization in finding success. Given Jeff’s motivational and exciting insight using fascinating firsthand accounts, audiences come to appreciate thought-provoking and actionable concepts that are applicable to anyone finding their own mission success. Join as Jeff offers a once-in-a-lifetime glimpse into “no fail” missions, the mindset of our nation’s most elite, and the attributes of leaders, teammates, teams, and the families that support them “Getting To X”.

Jeff holds a Masters of Business Administration from Duke University, BS in Education from the University of Southern Illinois, postgraduate certifications from Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Georgetown University in leadership and management.